Former Chief Justice of India

his judgments can be said to constitute watershed moments in Indian judicial history for enhancing the scope of the golden trinity of rights under the Constitution.

In a historic unanimous ruling on Section 377 IPC, while presiding over a Constitutional Bench, Chief Justice Misra partially struck down the said provision citing it to be irrational, indefensible and manifestly arbitrary and emphasized on the principles of individuality, liberty and dignity of the individual, right to privacy, equality of rights and highlighted the constitutional principles of transformative constitutionalism and constitutional morality and the doctrines of progressive realisation and non-retrogression of rights.

ABOUT “JUSTICE DIPAK MISRA”

Chief Justice Misra was part of the bench that struck down the century old Section 497 of IPC considering the provision to be unequal and arbitrary. It was the bench led by Justice Misra that pronounced a landmark ruling lifting the ban on the entry of women into the Sabarimala temple thus voicing opinion against discrimination against women of a particular age group. Again, a bench headed by Justice Misra, in Charu Khurana v. Union of India, ended the 59 year old practice in the Indian film industry that barred women from being classified as make-up artists stating that such a practice was a constitutionally impermissible discrimination against women.

In a unanimous ruling in Common Cause v. Union of India, the Constitution Bench led by Chief Justice Misra recognized the right to die with dignity as a fundamental right for smoothening the process of dying of terminally ill patients and persons in persistent vegetative state and allowed passive euthanasia and issued guidelines for advance directives in this regards.

In yet another landmark ruling, Chief Justice Misra, in Government of NCT of Delhi v. Union of India, had highlighted the constitutional principles of pragmatic constitutionalism, representative democratic governance, constitutional morality and cooperative federalism and expected mature statesmanship on the part of both the Lieutenant Governor and the Chief Minister.

Hailing the right to freedom of speech and expression, while staying the ban on the Movie ‘Padmavaat’ by certain States, Chief Justice Misra held that cinemas as an art form are an inseparable part of the right to free speech and expression. On similar lines, Justice Misra had dismissed a petition seeking ban on the Malayalam novel ‘Meesha’ while observing that the culture of banning books impacts the free flow of ideas and is an affront to the freedom of speech, thought and expression. The right to choice as an integral part of right to life and liberty has been emphasized in his judgments in the Hadiya and Shakti Vahini cases.

In another pathbreaking judgment, Chief Justice Misra, while presiding over a Constitution Bench, penned the judgment asking the Parliament to frame law to ensure decriminalisation of politics and further issued directions aimed at giving citizens an “informed choice” and infusing a culture of purity in politics by directing for wide publicity of criminal cases pending against candidates in view of the right of the citizens to be informed about antecedents of the candidates contesting elections.

Justice Misra led the bench which rejected the 1993 Mumbai serial blasts convict Yakub Memon’s appeal to stop his execution. A three-Judge bench led by Justice Misra upheld the death sentence awarded to the four convicts in the brutal 2012 Delhi gang rape- Nirbhaya case. Chief Justice Misra, in his judgments on lynching and mob vandalism, has condemned the horrendous acts of mobocracy and destruction of public property and issued guidelines to curb the same. Again, it was a bench of the Supreme Court headed by Justice Misra that settled the 120 year old Cauvery water dispute and laid important principles pertaining to water disputes.

Justice Misra has been a strong upholder of constitutional values and citizenry rights and a staunch defender of the rights to equality, liberty and dignity.
